CHURCH NEWS

- David Cloud -

BEWARE OF THE ANTI-FUNDAMENTALIST MESSAGE OF CCM - One of the messages that permeates Contemporary Christian Music is its dislike of fundamentalist separatism and biblical preaching. This is a powerful warning to strong Bible-believing churches. When fundamentalist churches bring CCM into their midst, they are associating with people who are their avowed enemies and who will undermine a separatist position. Consider a few of quotes from our book Contemporary Christian Music under the Spotlight (the source of the quotes can be found in the book): The Chinese CCM group For You advertises their music as "spiritual but not preachy." Steven Curtis Chapman says he tries to communicate a biblical world view in a way that will not be "abrasively preachy." Morgan Cryar says his "songs deal with youth issues and situations without being preachy." The lyrics to Donna Summer's music is described as being "unpreachily as possible, the approach most likely to win the attention of an intelligent non-Christian audience." Randy Stonehill says: "I don't want to preach at people." Michael W. Smith, one of the most popular Contemporary Christian Musicians, says. "My songs are not preachy — at all." In reviewing Steve Taylor's music, the Seattle Post-Intelligencer noted that "there is little preaching in his songs." CCM writer/performer Wayne Watson says: "I won't write a song that says, 'You better get right with God.' From my own experience I find that way sometimes makes people defensive." A reviewer observed that P.O.D. doesn't "preach or try to ram their spirituality down anyone's throat." MusicLine Magazine describes Steve Camp's music in these terms: "Though potent, the message never overwhelms or becomes preachy." The group U2 is described by the Boston Globe as representing a "non-dogmatic Christianity." The Chinese CCM group For You advertises their music as "spiritual but not preachy."

THE MOST IMPROBABLE HONEYBEE - The following is from Creation Moments, <http://www.creationmoments.net/radio/transcript.php?t=2282>: "One reason many scientists reject evolution is that it's impossible to explain even the simplest of the incredible designs we find in creation as the work of a mindless, impersonal force. Imagine the challenge of explaining the many specialized features of the honeybee as the work of no one! The honeybee has compound eyes that enable it to navigate by the sun even on cloudy days because it has a built-in polarized light filter. The honeybee's antennae contain both their sense of smell and sense of touch. For this reason they must be carefully cleaned. So the honeybees have special grooves in their front legs that are perfectly designed to clean them. The honeybees also have hairs on their body to collect pollen and baskets on their rear legs to carry it. And they have special glands for producing, shaping and cleaning off wax. When one returns home with news of a good pollen source, the honeybee has a language that it can use to tell the others about it! Not only is the honeybee a huge collection of special features united together, but they also live in a hive that unites thousands of individuals so that they all work together like a single organism! It simply goes against everything we know from science to suppose that millions of years of unplanned accidents could design and build the honeybee!"
